A NOTE FROM JIM:

I am working on notes for the fall semester's Behavioral Finance classes. Behavioral finance is the combination of economics, finance, and psychology. A few of the key takeaways: we don't make good decisions when we are stressed. Everyone is stressed. Stress comes in many flavors. Fear of loss (money, health, love, belonging, our own personal story, control) is at the heart of most stress. In today's world, so many people are struggling to deal with their stresses and this is magnifying and causing mental health problems (big and small). I do not have "the" single cure, but I will say that finding ways to de-stress is super important. Gain a perspective by looking outside of your own life: read, study history, chat with people outside of your usual circle of friends, volunteer, exercise, and get outside (nature and green spaces have been shown to reduce stress and improve mental health).

In the midst of the whirlwind of work, news, covid, politics, racism, inflation, gun violence, and so much more, let me remind you that most people are good. The news media, social media companies, and indeed our own brains all collaborate to have us focus on what separates and scares us, rather than what unifies and builds us up. So today, if only for a few seconds, look around and see how great things really are. Look for the good. The people holding the door open for the next person, the people helping others, the people working to make the world better. I am quite certain if you think about it, that is almost everyone, including the person in the mirror. Look for the beauty: a sunset, a flower, the taste of your favorite food. Live is too short to worry and stress all the time. Find the good.

You might ask, why is this in a grocery store's ad/note? Because I do think we play a role in improving quality of life. We are a small community store, you can see people, meet new friends, and see how even a small smile at the checkout can influence the rest of the day for a customer who may not have many other interactions all day. It is more relaxing, it is less stressful. You almost have to smile when you walk in.

I know I am biased, but I really do think that shopping small can help make the world a better place one person at a time.

It is So I want to thank you all for making the world a better place :)

And if you need something good, just ask. I am sure I can give you a long list of things that are good in the world.
